

In Dawah to Jihad, author Carmen Perez offers an explanation for the rise of radicalization in the United States using Bakersfield, California as a case study. She asserts that failure to prosecute subversives for crimes of treason in accordance with Article III, Section 3 of the US Constitution is at the root of the proliferation of Islamic extremism. Throughout the book she provides cognizant examples for additional reasons for the increase of radicalization, including the role of globalization, the Shariah Finance market, the centralization of the public school system, and the psychological characteristics driving state and non-state actors.
